

Stryan Structural Systems was established in 1995 by Steve Pankoski, a Colorado home builder for eighteen years. Stryan was initially established to provide structural floors for Pankoski's homebuilding company.

After installing floors for his own company, Steve saw the tremendous need to expand the structural floor market in the Denver Metro area. He began to move away from homebuilding, focusing on structural floors.

In 1999, Stryan began offering customers in-house design and engineering for their structural floors. It was in that same year that Stryan developed a new type of structural floor system; one that is currently the standard structural floor system used by Colorado homebuilders.

Stryan launched its residential post-tension products in 2002. Today, Stryan is one of the largest post-tension contractors in Colorado.

Stryan Structural Systems currently employs over 120 employees "dedicated to customer satisfaction."
